The Embassy Launches Festival Website: www.mutualinspirations.org

The Embassy of the Czech Republic announces the launching of the Mutual Inspirations Festival website www.mutualinspirations.org, featuring over 20 upcoming events, musical samples, and stories honoring the 170th birthday of composer Antonin Dvorak. The festival begins on September 8, 2011, and ends on October 28, 2011. On the website, viewers can take a sneak peak at the calendar of events which highlights local and international artists coming to the Washington, DC, community this fall.

The Mutual Inspirations Festival is an initiative spearheaded by the Embassy of the Czech Republic, under the patronage of First Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Visits U.S.

First Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Czech Republic Karel Schwarzenberg conducted a working visit to the United States from May 27 through June 4, 2011. A delegation consisting of representatives of Czech IT, film industries, and scientists focusing on the field of civil nuclear energy accompanied the Minister.

The Minister attended a Catholic Mass and then met with the business community and Czech compatriots of the Forth Worth area. Following the meeting, the Minister traveled to Houston in order to attend a program at the Czech Center Museum Houston. In the evening, Czech nuclear scientists associated under the umbrella of Czech Nuclear Education Network (CENEN), signed a Letter of Intent for Cooperation with their counterparts from Texas A&M University. The Minister

Dear Friends,

I am deeply honored and humbled to serve as the newly appointed Ambassador of the Czech Republic to the United States of America. I recently officially presented my credentials to President Barack Obama on July 7, 2011, expressing my appreciation for the gracious hospitality that the United States affords our mission and the core values that our countries share.

I take my duties and obligations over from Charge d’Affaires, ad interim, Daniel Kostoval, who has led the Czech mission since last summer. Thus, I would foremost like to express my sincerest thanks for all the work he and the Embassy staff accomplished in that time frame to further enhance the relations between the Czech Republic and the United States, especially in regards to intensifying bilateral economic cooperation. The Czech-US Economic Dialogue was launched late last year in order to increase mutual commercial exchange and investments.

I will continue to emphasize this cooperation as one of the three pillars of our countries’ relationship focusing on fostering scientific and research development. Further, as the Czech Republic and the United States are reliable allies in NATO, I am committed to work with our American partners to further deepen our ties in the field of security and defense. Last but not least, I remain devoted to the vision shared by our two countries to preserve and promote democracy and human rights around the world.

I have already had the privilege to join First Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Czech Republic Karel Schwarzenberg in his week long U.S. visit, during which he met with U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton in Washington, led a trade mission of Czech company representatives to California, and attended an annual Czech heritage festival in Texas. I very much valued meeting Czech compatriot communities around the United States.

This fall, I welcome all to engage in the celebration of this year’s Mutual Inspirations Festival to honor the close cultural ties between our countries through the work of famous Czech classical composer Antonín Dvořák. For information about the numerous events of the festival, please visit www.mutualinspirations.org.

For now, I wish everyone a relaxing and enjoyable summer.

Yours truly,

Petr Gandalovič

Honorary Consuls Meet in Washington

Ambassador Petr Gandalovic met with the Honorary Consuls General and Honorary Consuls serving on behalf of the Czech Republic at the Embassy on June 10, 2011. At this year’s annual meeting, the Honorary Consuls were briefed on political, economic, cultural, and consular matters regarding Czech-US relations. The Ambassador moreover emphasized that the Czech Republic deeply values the Honorary Consuls’ support and work. A roundtable discussion regarding the Consuls’ experiences and input closed the meeting.

RFE Celebrates 60th Anniversary

Czech Minister of Foreign Affairs Karel Schwarzenberg opened the event, which also included a discussion on “No Freedom Without Media Freedom.” Among other notable members present were Petr Gandalovic, Ambassador of the Czech Republic to the United States; Walter Isaacson, president of the Aspen Institute and chairman of the Broadcasting Board of Governors; His Excellency Husain Haqqani, Ambassador of Pakistan to the United States; David Kramer, executive director of Freedom House; and Thomas A. Dine, president of the American Friends of the Czech Republic and former president of RFE/RL, Inc.

Czech Software Company Opens in U.S.

Ambassador Gandalovic was honored to open in June the North American headquarters of Javlin, a leading IT and data software company from the Czech Republic. Several high level attendees, including Secretary Juan Verde from the Department of Commerce’s Office for Europe and Eurasia, joined the Ambassador to celebrate the company’s transatlantic expansion and cooperation with key customers such as IBM, Cisco, and Sungard. Javlin is an innovative champion in data software and high tech data solutions.

Filmmaker Brings Burma to the Forefront

Ambassador Gandalovic welcomed documentary filmmaker Jeanne Hallacy to the Embassy on June 23, 2011, to present the film Into the Current, which tells the story of Burma’s unsung heroes—its prisoners of conscience and the price they pay for speaking the truth to power in a military dictatorship.

The film follows Bo Kyi, once a political prisoner in Burma who now lives in exile just across the border in Thailand. His life remains bound to his more than 2,000 prisoner colleagues who are still behind bars. Some are his close friends, including the poet and inspirational leader Min Ko Naing, comedian Zarganar, and musician Win Maw. As his friends have fallen silent in remote jails, Bo Kyi has taken on the dangerous work of operating a secretive yet enormously effective underground network of practical supports for them and their families, taking their stories to the international arena.

A reluctant leader, Bo Kyi is a hard man to know. The winner of many human rights awards, he dislikes the limelight. A friendship spanning a decade allows filmmaker Jeanne Hallacy to follow the man, his motivations, and his cause.

“[In the film] I wanted to portray not only that they [political prisoners such as Bo Kyi] have endured, but also that they continue to love. They never talk of vengeance and have completely let go of anger,” stated Hallacy.

The film utilizes rare archival footage filmed by the Democratic Voice of Burma (DVB) and historical scenes of Aung San Suu Kyi as the visionary leader of the country’s non-violent movement. It depicts exiles who are continuing the political struggle; songwriter Khun Saing’s bittersweet refugee life, Zarganar’s vaudeville troupe, and other former prisoners whose humor, courage, and refusal to be silenced remain little known. While they and countless others fight on, the dream of a free Burma remains alive.

In regards to obtaining some of the footage she used for her film, she said, “It’s hard to explain how scary it is to be out on the street hiding a camera and then lifting that camera to your eye to steal your shot ... One of the cameramen from DVB was just sentenced to 65 years in prison.”

The screening was followed by a panel discussion, moderated by David Kramer (Executive Director, Freedom House), which included: Tom Malinowski (Washington Director of Human Rights Watch), Aung Din (Executive Director, U.S. Campaign for Burma), Benedict Rogers (Christian Solidarity Worldwide), and Jeanne Hallacy.

This event concludes the Embassy’s project “Democracy and Human Rights: Lessons from the Past for the Current Czech Foreign Policy. The various events put together within this project focused namely on the country’s totalitarian past, its current human-rights-promotion priorities and, topically, on the rights of women and children.

The festival is founded on the idea of giving rise to an “all American community project,” taking place at cultural, religious, and educational community centers through a variety of forms, such as music, art, dance, film, and literature. Through the celebration of the work of many famous personalities and the creations of individuals they in turn influenced, the festival aims to depict this long tradition of transatlantic inspiration and interpretation. Each year, the festival focuses on a new personality. For example, this year’s festival showcases Antonín Dvořák; however, next year the embassy will highlight Milos Forman.

Antonín Dvořák was one of the most prominent Czech classical composers. Due to his revolutionary thinking of the time, Dvořák left a legacy through his students who would later instruct American legends George Gershwin, Duke Ellington, and Aaron Copland. Moreover, taking in the sounds of America, Dvořák was inspired to create his most famous piece—Symphony No. 9 in E Minor, “From the New World,” which was listened to by U.S. astronaut Neil Armstrong during man’s first landing on the moon.

As one of the highlights of the festival, a special Dvořák Symposium lead by musicologist Michael Beckerman will be presented at the Library of Congress. Beckerman will speak on the role of African American sources in the composer’s conception of an American music.

Eva Velicka, from the National Museum in Prague, will join him for a discussion, “Manuscripts as Storytellers.” A lecture-recital with tenor Reginald Bouknight follows the symposium. The event includes a display of facsimiles of Dvořák’s New World Symphony and other artifacts.

Additional events include the Catholic University of America orchestra, under the direction of conductor Murry Sidlin, performing the New World Symphony at the National Museum of the American Indian, and the talented DC Youth Orchestra, under the direction of Maestro Jesus Manuel Berard, presenting this popular symphony in a special concert at the Kennedy Center Terrace Theater.

The festival also incorporates important spiritual centers. The Archbishop of Prague will celebrate Mass with the Choir of the Basilica performing works by Dvorak at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception. Furthermore, the Cathedral Choral Society will feature Dvorak’s renowned Te Deum at the Washington National Cathedral.

Other key events include the world premiere of Dvořák Jazz Dances by Charley Gerard performed by Washington Musica Viva at the Embassy of the Czech Republic, the American premiere of contemporary composer Miroslav Srnka’s Engrams at the Phillips Collection, the American premiere of the Western musical Tony D at the Kennedy Center Millennium stage, and more.

The Embassy has a fall season packed with events, accentuating the talented composer and the mutual inspirations that have ensued between the United States and the Czech Republic through the world of music.

Archbishop of Prague to Celebrate Mass in DC this Fall rchbishop of Prague Dominik Duka will celebrate a special Mass on September 25, 2011 at 10 am, in the Crypt Church of the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

The Mass will honor composer Antonin Dvorak as well as the 200th birthday of Saint John Nepomucene Neumann. As a special addition to the Mass, the Choir of the Basilica will perform Dvorak’s Mass in D Major, “Luzanska.” The event is part of the Mutual Inspirations Festival which showcases the long tradition of transatlantic inspiration between the Czech Republic and the United States.

Although Antonin Dvorak is the main personality of this year’s festival, the Mass also will recognize the contribution that Saint John Nepomucene Neumann gave to the United States. John Nepomucene Neumann (1811–1860), born in Prachatitz, Bohemia (part of modern-day Czech Republic), served as the fourth Bishop of Philadelphia. He was named after the holy Bohemian martyr and patron of the confessional seal, Saint John Nepomucene. During his time as Bishop of Philadelphia, he founded the first Catholic diocesan school system in the United States and increased the number of Catholic schools in his diocese from two to one hundred. In addition to his work in the schools, he also established 80 churches and founded hospitals and orphanages. He was the first American bishop to be canonized in 1977. Following his canonization, the National Shrine of Saint John Neumann was built at the Parish of St. Peter the Apostle in Philadelphia, PA. The remains of St. John Neumann rest under the altar of the shrine.

His Excellency Dominik Duka is the thirty-sixth Archbishop of Prague, appointed by Pope Benedict XVI in 2010. In 1975, he was deprived of the state authorization for the sacred ministry and worked in a Skoda factory in Plzen as a designer until the fall of the Iron Curtain. While under the communist regime, he worked in secret in the Order as a teacher of theology. From 1981-82, he was jailed in Plzen. He was a member of the Provincial of the Dominicans in Bohemia and Moravia (1986-1998) and the twenty-fourth bishop of Hradec Kralove (1998–2010). In 2010, he was elected the chairman of the Czech Bishop Conference.

Antonin Dvorak

ntonin Dvorak is one of the most prominent Czech classical composers of all time. It was his remarkable creativity and progressiveness which gained him fame even in his own lifetime, eventually bringing him for several years to the United States, where he also left an enormous musical footprint. While working in New York City, the composer, coming from humble beginnings in the Czech lands of Central Europe, took in the sounds of Native and African Americans and produced one of the most listened to symphonies on Earth called From the New World in 1893. Seventy six years later, this beautiful piece inspired in yet another new world as U.S. Astronaut Neil Armstrong took man’s first steps on the moon.

Composer

Born in Nelahozeves near Prague to a village innkeeper and butcher, Dvorak defied following in his father’s footsteps and went on to pursue a career in music. Thanks to the influence of his teacher, Antonin Liehmann, he became an accomplished violinist, organist, and violist, playing viola for the Czech National Theater Orchestra. Dvorak also struggled to become a recognized composer. Through his trials and will to succeed, Dvorak became friends with celebrated composer Johannes Brahms, who greatly influenced him and also connected him with his own publisher. Dvorak’s compositions became a sensation. Among them were his most memorable pieces, the Slavonic Dances, which incorporated the rhythms of Slavic folk dances, demonstrating Dvorak’s passion about his Czech homeland and reflecting his heritage and humble origins. His most renowned works include the New World Symphony, the “American” String Quartet, and the Cello Concerto in B minor. He also composed operas, symphonic, choral, and chamber music.

Mutual Inspiration

Antonin Dvorak’s fascination with his ethnic roots and folk melodies gained him the attention of the founder of National Conservatory of Music in New York City, Jeanette Thurber, who was paving the way to capture and develop an American music style. Offering him handsome pay, Thurber persuaded the Czech composer to become the director of the conservatory for three years, beginning in 1892. Being greatly inspired by the sounds of America, Dvorak left a great legacy through his music and students in the US, before returning to Prague to subsequently direct the Music Conservatory there from 1901 until his death on May 1, 1904. Today, a statue of Antonin Dvorak stands in Stuyvesant Square Park, near where he resided on 327 East 17th Street, thanks to the Dvorak American Heritage Association, in cooperation with the New York Philharmonic and the Stuyvesant Park Neighborhood Association.

Teacher

Beyond composing and directing, Antonin Dvorak left an enormous legacy through those he taught at the National Conservatory in New York in his three years there. Dvorak’s students, Henry Burleigh, Will Marion Cook, Rubin Goldmark, Harry Rowe Shelly, and Edwin Franko Goldman, all eventually made meaningful contributions to musical life and literature. They carried the torch of American music to those who would become great American legends. Goldmark taught George Gershwin and instructed Aaron Copland in the fundamentals of counterpoint and composition; Shelly instructed Charles Ives on the organ; and Cook became a pioneer of black musical theater and a mentor to the great jazz composer and performer, Duke Ellington.

American Contemporary Composer to Premiere New Work

Composer and saxophonist Charley Gerard will present the world premiere of his piece Dvorak Jazz Dances with Washington Musica Viva (WMV), a DC-based nonprofit group comprised of professional musicians, at the Embassy of the Czech Republic on September 21, 2011 at 7:30 pm, as part of the Mutual Inspirations Festival.

When asked to describe the new piece, Gerard said, “Just as Dvorak was inspired by the American landscape to compose some of his finest works, I have written Dvorak Jazz Dances, inspired by the Czech composer’s two series of Slavonic Dances, Op. 46 and 72.”

Gerard further described the new piece, saying, “Each of my Dvorak Jazz Dances begins with a short excerpt of a Slavonic Dance and is followed by an original theme in which a kernel of the Dvorak theme is reinterpreted.”

He also discussed how both Duke Ellington and George Gershwin both received musical direction from musicians who were students of Dvorak at Jeanette Thurber’s National Conservatory. In regards to jazz, he said, “Jazz was a musical genre that itself was inspired by Dvorak’s American legacy…”

Concerning his new work, he said that jazz improvisation is an important element of the piece. “Rhythmic invention and humor are key elements of my music. I hope that these Dances are rhythmically compelling and sometimes funny.”

The quintet that will perform with Gerard include Washington Musica Viva Founder Carl Banner (piano), Herman Burney (bass), Lenny Robinson (drums), and Syberen van Munster (guitar).

Tickets for the concert are $20 and can be reserved by email reservations@mutualinspirations.org (with “WMV Jazz” in the subject line) or calling 202/274-9105.

80s Party Celebrates Freedom

Deputy Chief of Mission Daniel Kostoval greeted over 400 guests at the Embassy’s 80s Party on June 24, 2011. The evening event celebrated and remembered the fall of the Iron Curtain and called attention to the exhibition The Stories of the Iron Curtain, which focused on those who tried to escape Czechoslovakia through varied means, such as hot air balloons, tunnels, creating their own tanks, among other inventive ways.

Public Relations Officer Andrea Pohl spoke of her escape when she was only 8 years old, and how her grandmother cried when she was saying goodbye at the bus station. At the time, she did not understand why her grandmother was crying so much. With her four-year-old brother and mother, she spent four months in a UN refugee hotel filled with mice and bugs.

“Then we arrived at the camp, I remember a man standing there who told me that I could never go back home to see my grandmother.”

Pohl arrived in the United States Thanksgiving day 25 years ago. After the fall of the Iron Curtain, she was reunited with her grandmother.

“Each of my Dvorak Jazz Dances begins with a short excerpt of a Slavonic Dance and is followed by an original theme in which a kernel of the Dvorak theme is reinterpreted.”

Famous Male Rides to Space

Landing back on Earth on June 1, 2011, the NASA space shuttle Endeavour had an unusual passenger during its last mission into space. It was the plush version of Krtek—a children’s beloved cartoon character animated by Zdenek Miler in 1956. Astronaut Andrew Feustel—whose mother-in-law is from the Czech Republic—packed a stuffed Krtek along with him as one of his personal items.

Feustel stated, “It is our hope that with Krtek’s help, our mission inspires students and adults to excel in the study of science, technology, engineering and mathematics that will be essential to future space exploration and beneficial to human kind.”

To learn more about Krtek’s spaceflight, read more at www.dokosmuskrtkem.cz.

Czech Basketball Star Selected by the Washington Wizards

The Washington Wizards selected Czech basketball talent Jan Vesely for the No. 6 overall pick in the first round of the National Basketball Association’s (NBA) entry draft. This is the highest draft pick in which a Czech player has ever been selected in the history of the league. Vesely, who last played for Partizan Belgrade in Serbia, will be the first Czech player in the NBA since Jiri Welsch in 2006.

The 21-year-old, 6 foot 11 inch star hails from Ostrava, Czech Republic, and comes from an athletic family: his father was a former basketball player, while his mother played volleyball.

Borko Popic, lead scout and contributor to NBAdraft.net, lists many of Vesely’s strengths on the website stating that Vesely “possesses a terrific combination of size and length for the SF (Small Forward) position... If he catches the ball and his feet are set and pointed towards the basket, he usually will knock down shots.”

After being picked by the Wizards in the first round, Vesely quickly became famous for kissing his girlfriend Eva Kodouskova. In a video made by blogger Kyle Weidi from Truth About It, Weidi asks Vesely about the kiss after being drafted. “This was a big moment for my family... So, I don’t know. It was casual,” Vesely said. During the brief interview, Vesely said that he met his girlfriend on the basketball court.

The Embassy would like to wish Vesely the best of luck in his career with the Wizards and welcomes him and his family to the Washington, DC, area. Fans can support Vesely by going to the Verizon Center next season to watch the only Czech NBA player in action.

Avalon Remains Committed to Czech Films

The Avalon Theater, in its fifth year of collaboration with the Embassy of the Czech Republic on the Lions of Czech Film Series, remains committed to bringing award-winning Czech films to the Washington, DC, community. The series runs once a month and gives the community an opportunity to view Czech films that are popular hits in Europe.

3 Seasons in Hell (Tri sezony v pekle)
August 10, 8 pm
Synopsis: Ivan Heinz has just turned 19 and runs away from home. He devotes himself to the revolutionary politics and poetry, throwing himself into a destructive romance with Jana. The two lovers lead a life peppered with romance, argument, and laughter, against a backdrop of 1940s dance music and political change. As the new communist regime reveals its oppressive side, Ivan and Jana remain blind to the looming danger. They plan their escape to Paris, until they are confronted by the regime. (DIR: Tomas Masin, 2009, 110 min., in Czech with English subtitles)

The film was nominated for 12 Czech Lions Awards (2010) and received awards for Best Picture, Director, Actor, Screenplay, and Best Cinematography.

A Walk Worthwhile (Dobre placena prochazka)
September 14, 8 pm
Synopsis: Uli and Vanilka are getting a divorce. They are in the middle of sorting out snags in the divorce proceedings with their attorney when a postman delivers two mysterious telegrams from Liverpool. Vanilka’s rich aunt has decided to bequeath to the couple’s future child one million pounds. In the wake of this news, Vanilka, Uli, and the others engage in various wily amorous capers with the aim of securing this untold wealth for themselves. (DIR: Milos Forman, 2009, 85 min., in Czech with English subtitles)

The film premiered at the Karlovy Vary International Film Festival (2009) and screened at a number of international festivals.

Havel’s Leaving (Odchazeni)
October 12, 8 pm
Synopsis: The film maps the last two days of Rieger’s stay in a villa, before he is evicted. With each succeeding scene, the situation gradually goes from bad to worse. Irena loses her respect for Rieger, particularly after she catches him with Bea in the gazebo. Vlasta not only goes back on her proposal to offer a roof but even proposes a change to Rieger’s will. The journalists turn out to be in the pay of the gutter press which won’t print Rieger’s replies to political questions, but focuses solely on his private life. Therefore, his departure from public life is cast into a disreputable light. (DIR: Vaclav Havel, 2011, 95 min., in Czech with English subtitles)

This new film is based on Havel’s play by the same name.

“Uz je to tady!” (It is here!), encouraging others to join her and ring their keys.

The chant and the ringing of the keys was a symbol of the Velvet Revolution. When the DJ played Prayer for Marta by Marta Kubisova, a song that became the ballad of the revolution—black and white images of the revolution were displayed on the wall.

After the presentations, DJ Tom from Prague began the 80s style disco with Pink Floyd’s “We Don’t Need No Education,” from The Wall. The evening included songs from such iconic bands as Depeche Mode, Madonna, and the Bangles. Attendees to the celebration came dressed in their 80s regalia—jean jackets, jelly bracelets, big hair, and neon colors. The event celebrated this individual freedom and how the Velvet Revolution ended years of communist rule.
